NOTE ABOUT EMAIL ADDRESSES:

Kinship Circle spent a good deal of time researching contact information for Chinese government officials. This is very difficult information to obtain in a closed, communist society. You do not need to report any emails that may bounce. We have no control over outdated government websites or emails that are disabled due to the worldwide outcry against the Yunnan dog slaughter.

If you feel very strongly about this issue, we have also provided as many street addresses and fax numbers as we could find. If you wish to investigate contact information on your own, this is a good starting point: GOVERNMENT LINKS - <http://www.china.org.cn/english/GS-e/138400.htm>

Dear Sir / Madam,

I am sickened by images of Chinese authorities bludgeoning dogs in a death sweep of Chuxiong in Yunnan province. From July 25-30, more than 50,000 dogs were viciously beaten, hung, electrocuted or poisoned. Some, companion animals out walking with families, were forcibly taken and clubbed on the spot. Others were defenseless strays, ambushed at night.

All were blameless victims of a flimsy health care system, in which just 3 percent of dogs are inoculated against rabies and over 2,000 people succumb to the disease annually. While I sympathize with the rise in dog bites and deaths of three people in Mouding County, rabies is a very controllable disease. Mass reactive culls have repeatedly proven incapable of curbing stray populations and inhibiting rabies outbreaks. In fact, the primary outcome of the five-day massacre in rural southwestern China is the loss of government credibility among nationals and the world.

According to international news reports, county officials had originally promised guardians the rough equivalent of 62 U.S. cents to kill their own dogs. When this initiative failed, government death squads searched homes to confiscate dogs people had hidden. I understand Public Security Bureau officers stormed villages at night to corner barking dogs and beat them until dead. Some were unregistered. Others were registered and even vaccinated against rabies. Animals who tried to flee were trapped at roadside checkpoints. Only police and military dogs escaped the carnage.

I implore Chinese officials to recognize the growing number of households with companion animals. The Chinese Center of Disease Control estimates dogs now live in 70 percent of rural homes. Yet a comparatively low 3 percent are immunized against rabies. Rabies is largely preventable through an interactive network of human health, animal health and municipal agencies. Please establish a non-violent response that includes public access to low-cost rabies treatment, humane education, and "Spay/Neuter/Vaccinate/Release" programs to manage stray populations. Other civilized nations that employ these methods report a significant reduction in strays and the occurrence of rabies.

The world community will never forget the brutal eradication of some 50,546 dogs. We ask that you publicly condemn the blood of innocents in your streets and fields. We ask government officials to revamp animal protection laws and foster a culture of responsible guardianship, rabies prevention, and humane animal control.

We urge you to make enforceable animal protection laws a priority before the 2008 Olympics in Beijing. Many travelers will not spend money in a country that sanctions animal abuse. I understand a worldwide boycott of Chinese tourism and products is underway. I intend to join that boycott until Chinese authorities initiate momentous reforms for animals.

Sincerely,
